Services Agreement Template

While this Services Agreement might be overkill for individual readings, I strongly recommend that you present a written contract to any business, organization, or group that's hiring you for an event. If you're being hired by a company for a corporate event, a host or hostess for a party, or any organization for their event, then you had better start with some basic terms in writing. If nothing else, it establishes everyone's expectations, which is very important for avoiding disagreements or disappointment later on. This contract is filled in hypothetically by Jane Arcana who is doing business as ("dba") Terrific Tarot. She is signing this contract with Ace Corporation. Pay attention to the parts in bold, red font. That's what you'll (obviously) want to change if you use this template and modify it for your own purposes. If you have business liability insurance, then show your services agreement template to your insurance agent to confirm that it is in line and worded in a way that will optimize your insurance coverage.

Disclaimer: This document is a broad and general sample template only. I do not know the specifics of your business and the best terms to use for a Services Agreement will most definitely vary case by case. To adequately protect yourself, an attorney who is fully informed of your specific business practice should draft your Services Agreement. Do not rely on a broad and general cookie cutter sample template, which is exactly what this document is—cookie cutter and basic. No part of this template should be construed as legal advice and no attorney-client relationship is created between us
